Dear Students,

It gives me immense pleasure to present the second issue of "Hithaishi". This issue briefly describes the activities conducted by DSA from August 2019 to June 2021, with a view to create awareness and motivate you to be a part of these programs.

This year, we at MAHE have undertaken the year-long project "Nasha Mukh Udupi Abhiyaan by involving Young Leaders of MAHE" funded by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, Government of India, in an effort to educate our youth and free our society of the perils of substance abuse. The main objective of this Abhiyaan is to prevent substance abuse, create awareness and sensitize students of MAHE and also people living in villages in and around Udupi, to the problems resulting from drug use.

I request our student community to help us achieve this objective by involving themselves in all activities that we have planned as part of the NMBA project, and help make our campus as well as surrounding cities of our district Nasha Mukh.

Finally, I want to express my gratitude to the Editorial Team for having put in so much time and effort to bring out this Newsletter.

All the best!

Dr. Geetha Maiya

HOW SOCIAL MEDIA AFFECTS STUDENTS AND THEIR MENTAL HEALTH

— MRS. KARUNA DEVADIGA (MAHE STUDENT COUNSELLOR)

When you think of “social media,” what’s the first thing that comes to your mind? Facebook? Social networking? A distraction? What about college students and mental health?

One of the biggest challenges that college students face today is struggling with mental health. College is a time to explore and learn new things, but it can also be hard to balance school, studies and social life, while also trying to take care of our physical and mental health. According to mentalhealth.gov, mental health includes “emotional, psychological and social well-being”. It affects how we think, feel and act and helps to determine how we handle stress, relate to others and make choices.

On top of all the stress from studying, writing papers and campus activities, students are constantly distracted by their phones — more specifically — social media. We live in a digital age where almost everything is available online and when it comes to social media usage among college students, one thing is clear... it has become a part of our everyday life and has allowed us to be more connected than ever. But, is using it too much bad for us and does it further affect our mental health?

Negative effects on Mental Health

Many studies have been conducted to observe the effects of social media on students and their mental health. Some of the most common issues are depression, anxiety, low self-esteem, body image, sleep problems, social isolation and emotional difficulties. Another common issue is comparing ourselves to others based on their online profiles and creating “unrealistic expectations” as to how we should look, act or feel. For example, seeing someone on Instagram or Snapchat enjoying themselves and having the “perfect life”, may create feelings of jealousy or envy. We develop an impression that others are living a better life, while in fact we may have viewed “edited versions” of people’s lives, and the content they post may not be an authentic reflection of who they are or how they feel. This can often lead to idealized versions and “competitions” between one’s real and virtual life.

Effects on Academics

When it comes to academics, studies have shown that students are more likely to participate in drinking and doing drugs, not studying for exams or working on assignments or paying attention in class, resulting in lower grades and GPAs.

One student reported: “As a college student, it’s really hard to keep up with everything from school to work to family so I think social media is a great tool to have. Sometimes I’ll see my friends having fun and think I wish I was there or compare myself to ‘other college students’ on Instagram. Social media also helps me to express my frustrations sometimes about school especially on sites like Twitter. But, it’s also a distraction especially when I am trying to get my work done.”

Another said, “I only use it if I have to and mostly to connect with classmates and family and when I am bored or need a break from school. I really try not to go on it when I am working on assignments because I know once I go on it, it’ll be a while before I get back to work.”

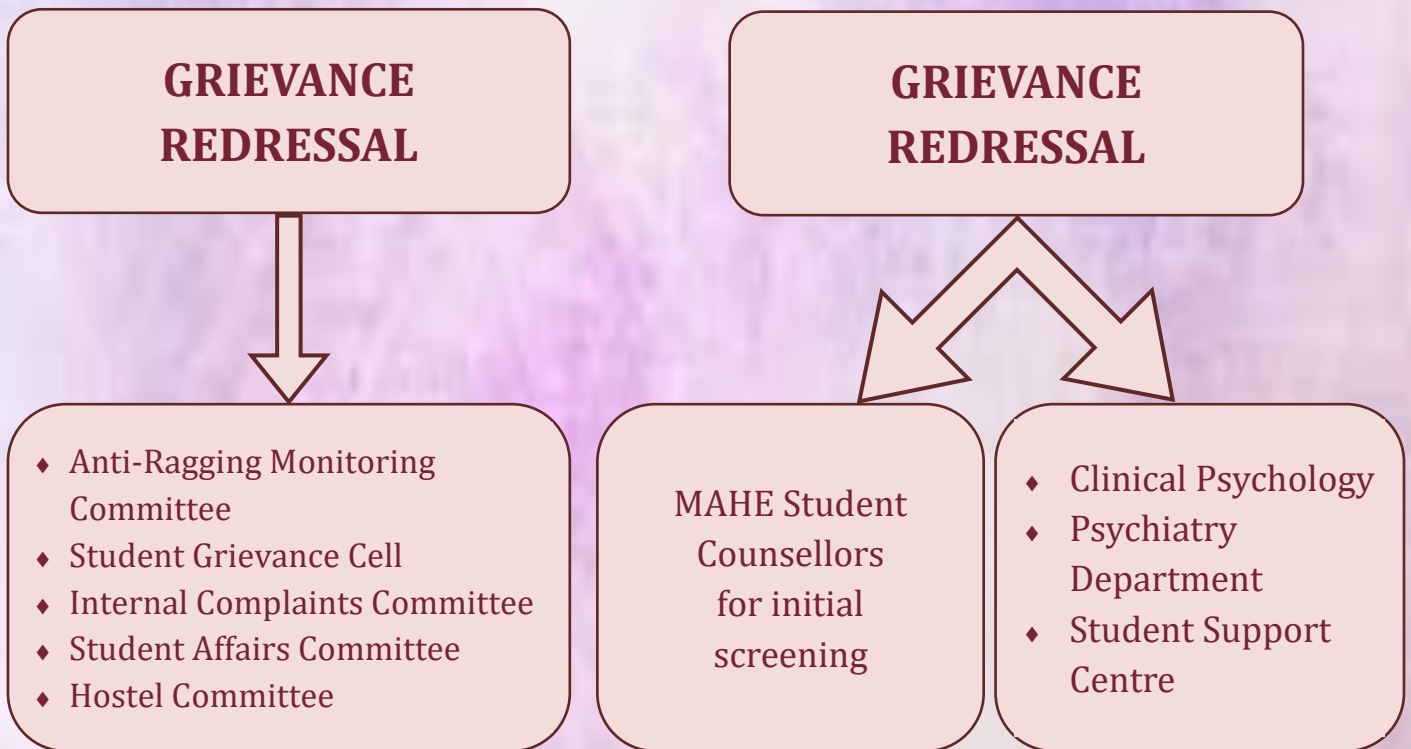

Although these responses may not apply to the vast majority of students, it does give an insight as to what some students face when using social media.

What do you do if you feel like social media is impacting your mental health and academics and what can you do to not necessarily eliminate social media from your life but use it in a more positive way? During times when you are feeling down or anxious, it is best to try to avoid using social media to eliminate the comparison factor. Also, consider taking a social media break or “detox,” for a few hours or even days especially when it comes to mental health and academics.

Social media is obviously a great tool and has both negative and positive effects on our emotional well-being. It’s impact on our mental health can depend on a number of factors including how we use it. It’s hard for college students to avoid social media but knowing how it may have an effect on mental health can help us make better decisions on how we use it.
